

The Sweetheart

Note: this character is only playable if the Flamboyant is also in the game. You will need to align with that player on your characters' genders and sexual orientations.

You started turning tricks in secondary school to get money for a little weed or beer with your friends. It was a thrill and easy money and you never even thought about your safety, readily performing sex acts on complete strangers in sketchy parts of town. After you ended up in the hospital one night, beaten half to death, you started working more closely with other streetwalkers and got to know the local homeless people, even giving them a little something to keep an eye out for you. That's how you met your partner (The Flamboyant): you would always seek each other out to check in, bringing little gifts and eventually falling in love.

You got tired of constantly keeping an eye out for the cops and wanted to find a place to capitalize on your relationship; the Lily's Madam obliged and even lets you offer special discounts (on your earnings, of course, not the Lily's) to book duo dates (two companions sharing one date), your specialty. When it's just you with a client, you like to take the edge off a little and are always happy to share a client's drug of choice with them – from their own stash, naturally, or from yours for an extra big tip. The Madam would kick you out quick-smart if they found out because there's nothing like drug peddling to bring down a house fast, so you keep it to yourself and maybe one or two friends who share your habits. Your fiancé/e doesn't know.

You're worried a more money-hungry Madam wouldn't grant you the flexibility to discount your duos so you want the next one to be sympathetic to your situation. If you're honest, you're not really sure you want to keep working as a companion at all... If only you had the money, maybe you could become the next Madam. But you've been saving to get married for ages and the happy day is next week!

You've worked well with some of your colleagues for several years and Tuesdays often find you enjoying an after-shift drink with The Apple Doesn't Fall Far (who you know from your days on the street), The Happy Hooker, The Investor, and The Flamboyant (your fiancé/e!). The Girlfriend has been flitting about the edges of this group lately and you like them a great deal, although The Apple Doesn't Fall Far seems to have something against them and, as the person you most often share drugs with, you have their back as they have yours.

Together with your fiancé/e, you've become pretty friendly with The Miserable Wretch and are awfully curious about The Practical's story: you're not sure how, yet, but you know someone struggling when you see one and want to help. The Responsible is an exception to that rule, they are so holier-than-thou about saving their family.

You can't imagine your life without your fiancé but don't think they would understand your need for a little something to get through dates alone and don't want them to find out. Recently, you got a little too fucked up on a couple solo dates and think The Brown-noser noticed; you'll need to try to convince them not to report you.